MLC Quarterly Australian Wealth Sentiment Survey

The quarterly MLC Australian Wealth Sentiment Survey shows consumer balance sheets remain conservative - with a heavy emphasis on deposits and paying off debt. However, the December quarter continued the trend of a growing appetite for direct shares. Those earning $75,000 to $100,000 showed the greatest increase (quarter on guarter) in directly held shares and highest change in intentions over the next three months. Of the states, Victorians showed a considerable increase in shares (27% vs. 17.6% Q3) as part of their portfolio mix, while Western Australia and South Australia showed a drop in debt repayment. A marked decline is evidenced in the 30 to 49 age group identifying cash (24.9% vs. 31.7% Q3) as part of their portfolio mix, shifting into superannuation. In a special report on retirement also released today, we examine key drivers concerning financial adequacy for retirement. Respondents note that key barriers to sufficient saving include physical health, employment status, and a lack of a saving/ investment plan.

A look at wealth sentiment in more detail reveals:

Investment strategy - current

- While investors maintain a conservative risk stance with superannuation, debt repayment, and cash the preferred investment options, an increased number identified a portfolio mix with more direct shares.
- Victorian residents and males are now most diversified across asset types, especially shares.
- Higher income earners typically hold a higher portfolio mix, especially shares and property.
- By marital status, married couples tend to hold a greater mix of cash, shares, and property.

Investment strategy - next three months

- Debt repayment and deposits are still the main focus, albeit interest in super and shares are increasing.
- Females intend to increase holdings in investment property and are more intent on reducing debt.
- WA residents have the strongest intention to divest shares, bonds, and balanced funds, investing more into super.
- Higher income earners favour super and property, lower income earners still prefer cash.
- Married couples, along with defactos, aim to move into property and pay down debt, while widows and singles are looking to divest shares and increase cash.

- By age, 30 to 49 year olds are particularly interested in paying off debt and moving into investment property, with those aged 50+ intent on more super, cash, and shares.
- By household size, larger households display a strong intention to deleverage and acquire property.

Concerns about superannuation and investments

- The key concern is a failure to provide sufficient funds for retirement, with concerns over changes to superannuation rules ranked second, especially for those aged 50+.
- WA is most concerned about providing for retirement, losing money, high fees, and missing investment opportunities.
- Females are typically more concerned than males across all categories, except missing investment opportunities.
- Divorced people are most concerned about inadequate retirement, losing money, inflation, and rule changes to super.

Life insurance

• Demand for life insurance is strongest among larger households and married people.

Time to retirement

• Those with greater than five years to retirement have the strongest intention to invest for growth. This intention also typifies males, high income earners, rural towns, people under 50, and those with kids.

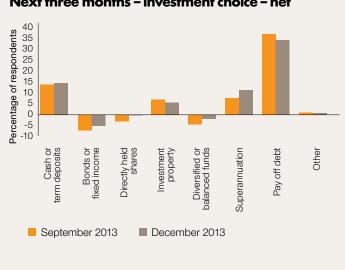

More interest in super, as shares improve to neutral status. Debt repayment and deposits remain the current investment focus.

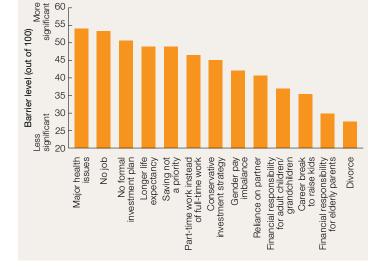

Physical health, employment and savings/investment plans key barriers to sufficient saving in retirement.

Inadequate funds for retirement ranked by category

In our regular MLC Australian Wealth Sentiment Survey, one question we ask is what concerns respondents have about risks in superannuation and retirement. The following chart shows the concern that continually ranks highest-inadequate funds for retirement—by category.

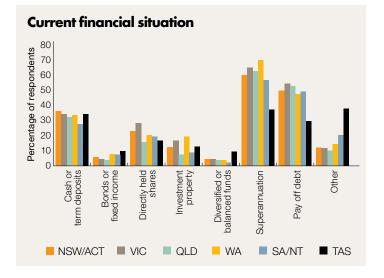

In order to understand why respondents are concerned about the prospects of being inadequately prepared for retirement, our special report also released this guarter, takes an in-depth look at key potential drivers of this concern.

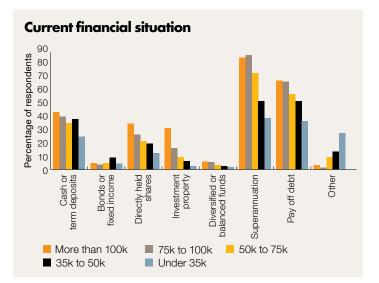

Current financial situation

By state: VIC more share oriented. WA holds more super and property.

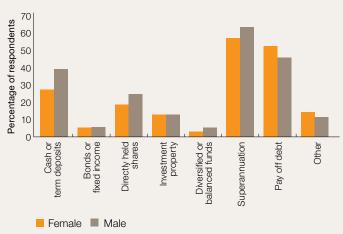

By income: People with higher incomes have a higher portfolio mix, especially shares and investment property.

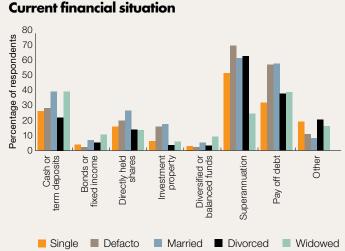

By gender: Males identified with more diverse portfolio structures.

Current financial situation

Marital status: Widowed hold cash, although down on September quarter, married hold shares and property, defactos hold increased investment property compared to Q3.

Appendix 1: About the survey

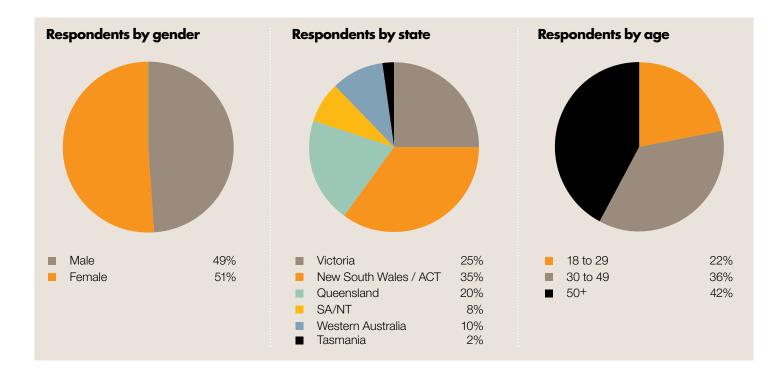

The MLC Quarterly Australian Wealth Sentiment Survey aims to assess the investment environment including investor intentions.

The wealth survey is based on survey participants' responses to seven questions related to:

- Current financial situation asking respondents to indicate current holdings in each asset class.
- Investment intentions asking the respondent whether they are likely to invest more or less. This is based on respondent's intentions to change their portfolio mix. Net values shown are the difference in intentions.
- Level of concern related to superannuation and other investments.
- Likely change in life insurance.
- Distance to retirement and investment strategy.

2,087 respondents participated in the December survey, with weights applied to age, location, and gender to ensure the survey reasonably reflects the Australian population. The survey was conducted over the period 9 November to 21 November 2013.

The breakdown of our survey respondents—by age, location, and gender—is shown in the charts below.
